Abstract: The purpose of this research work is to examine the financial effect of supply chain disruptions (SCDs) caused by coronavirus disease 2019 (COVID-19) and how the magnitude of such effects depends on event time and space that may moderate the signalling environment for shareholder behaviors during the pandemic. This study analyses a sample of 206 SCD events attributed to COVID-19 made by 145 publicly traded firms headquartered in 21 countries for a period between 2020 and 2021. Change in shareholder value is estimated by employing a multi-country event study, followed by estimating the differential effect of SCDs due to the pandemic by event time and space. On average, SCDs due to pandemic decrease shareholder value by -2.16%, which is similar to that of pre-pandemic SCDs (88 events for 2018–2019). This negative market reaction remains unchanged regardless of whether stringency measures of the firm's country become more severe. Supply-side disruptions like shutdowns result in a more negative stock market reaction than demand-side disruptions like price hikes. To shareholder value, firm's upstream or downstream position does not matter, but supply chain complexity serves as a positive signal. This study provides the first empirical evidence on the financial impact of SCDs induced by COVID-19. Combining with signaling theory and event system theory, this study provides a new boundary condition that explains the impact mechanism of SCDs caused by the pandemic.

Abstract: Among the various climate change causing agents, transportation alone is responsible for 19.2% of the carbon emissions. By proper implementation of various preventive measures, the impact of transportation on climate change can be drastically reduced. It is also necessary to determine the relationship between the transportation factors responsible for creating environmental degradation and causing climate change and to rank them based on the preventive measures impact to deal with them. In this paper, we have identified the transportation factors that affect climate change and the factors related to its preventive measures based on the 'environment', 'sociology' and 'modernity' elements of Ecological Modernization Theory (EMT). Given the context, this study focuses on development of an assessment framework that combines three techniques: Simple Additive Weighting (SAW), Interpretive Structural Modelling (ISM) and Interpretive Ranking Process (IRP).

Abstract: In this research, collaboration attributes related to the firm's intrinsic and extrinsic facets at pertinent levels (i.e. enterprise, strategic, operational, and tactical levels) for construction equipment OEMs (original equipment manufacturers) operating in India have been quantified and modeled. For modeling the intra-firm collaboration at respective organizational levels, relevant attributes have been populated employing literature review followed by subsequent validation from pertinent focus groups. The focus groups comprising professionals working in the construction and mining equipment industry in India aided us in estimating the extent of interdependencies and influences within/amongst collaboration attributes. The collaboration attributes and respective interdependencies/influences are modeled employing the concept of graph theory wherein the individual attributes are represented using vertices and influences/interdependencies are represented using edges. The collaboration indices resulting from the variable permanent matrix have been derived as well. Scenario and subsequent sensitivity analysis are performed. This research discusses the significance and aspects related to various collaborative attributes and the interrelations amongst them. Further, the research also evolves quantitative measures of collaboration indices at enterprise, strategic, tactical and operational levels by employing a graph-theoretic approach (GTA). The authors have also extricated and discussed a number of meaningful implications from both the perspectives of interorganizational relationships (IORs) and the normative theory of organizations using a cross-case analysis of five firms having operations in India. The research would aid organizations (particularly those belonging to the construction equipment sector) measure the efficacy of collaboration in respective value-chains at strategic, tactical and operational levels. From the theoretical perspective, the integration of the IORs and normative theory of organizations enables looking at the intra-firm collaboration problem from a multi-dimensional standpoint involving activities, performance measures, action initiation, communication, shades of top management, level of activity, etc.

IIM Raipur hosts 'The Arthniti Talks'

The opening event of their Economics & Public Policy Student Club

Raipur, Nov 20: IIM Raipur initiated 'The Arthniti Talks', the opening event of the Economics & Public Policy Student Club of IIM Raipur last on Saturday. The theme of the discussion was 'Unfolding Indian Economic Policies: Implementation and Evaluation' in the presence of the Guests of Honour, Prof. Rudra Sensarma - Professor of Economics, IIM

Kozhikode and Ashish Desai - Development scholar and professional. The discussion was moderated by Prof. Rashmi Shukla - Chairperson Economics & Public Policy Area, IIM Raipur, shedding light on the contemporary macroeconomic policies of Indian economy.

The Economics & Public Policy Student Club of IIM Raipur was formed with the vision to provide students with opportunities to discuss and deepen their understanding of economic and business issues, preparing them for critical thinking and independent analysis to lead a life of responsibility and leadership. In order to fulfill this objective, the club plans to hold several events and activities such as The Arthniti-talk, their flagship event, followed by Nitivichar, Finding Chanakya, ThinkTank to name a few.

After a warm welcome of the guests, Prof. Rashmi Shukla commenced the discussion by underlining the need to have a practical view of economics beyond its theoretical aspects. Followed by asking for the views of the guests on the performance of the monetary policies in India, she went ahead with opening varied subjects for the discussion like the implications of the Digital Currency, Forex Market, the current state of the Banking sector, Financial Inclusion, and the structural reforms necessary for the growth of the Indian economy.

Prof. Rudra Sensarma shared his thoughts on the same by sharing that on the ground level world is facing Polycrisis due to the lingering effects of COVID, supply-side shortages, the war between Russia and Ukraine, etc. He also enlightened the audience with the concepts of unconventional monetary policy with Bond purchases, Operation Twist, etc. along with its implications by the Reserve Bank of India, and applauded the Reserve Bank of India for the same. He added that treasurability could be an issue with Digital Currency. He shared that RBI will use appropriate encryption security methods and interest will be aligned to overall policies. Ashish Desai discussed the importance of capacity building of people under the agenda of financial inclusion and the necessity of granting them access to banking and credit. He also elucidated the difference between livelihood and entrepreneurship and how the latter is important for labor force participation, financial inclusion and economic growth. In his words, "MSME is the pivot point of GDP Growth. Financial Inclusion is not just focused on the finance sector, it has an impact on various sectors."
