Parashar, A., Kumar, M., & Saluja, V. (2019). Discovering India Through Imagery in Postcolonial Travel Writings. Tourism Culture & Communication, 19(2), 103-110.

Abstract: During the colonial and the imperial era certain conceptions or images were held and cherished, largely by the white world of the non-white world. Drawing upon the postcolonial theories beginning with Said's Orientalism to Graham Huggan's ideas of postcolonial discourses being marketed and domesticated for Western consumption, an investigation is made here of travel writings about India over a period from 1977 to 2002. This article focuses on the perceptions of India in the following travel writing books: V. S. Naipaul's India: A Wounded Civilization, Mark Tully's No Full Stops in India, and Sarah MacDonald's Holy Cow: An Indian Adventure. The article discusses the different impressions that the travelers have of India and the representations that they make motivated by their contrasting personal experience and ideas about tradi tions and culture. For these writers India becomes a fictional construct and a sum of the tourist attraction it lays out through a chronological sequence of events. The article unravels the postcolonial agenda of the postcolonial writers and attempts to build the real image of India through distorted representations in these three travel writing books. The article reflects important cues on the travel writings in India and at the same time openly reveals their transnational link to the global sphere.

Debojyoti Das, M.Kannadhasan, Puja Bhowmik(2019). Geopolitical Risks and Precious Metals, Journal of Economic Research, 24(1), 49-66.

Abstract: We empirically examine the impact of Geopolitical Risk (GPR) on tradable precious metal returns for a period spanning over January 1985 to December 2017. We report the evidence of: (a) increase in GPR of 100 units increases Gold returns by 0.0029 percent. (b) For a 100 unit increase in GPR the returns of Silver, Platinum and Palladium falls by -0.0008, -0.0057 and -0.0343 percent respectively. (c) Gold returns are higher (and positive) under threat conditions rather than actual occurrence of any risk events. (d) Palladium is found to be most vulnerable to GPR and (e) we also find positive and significant sensitivity of Gold at normal market conditions.

Abstract: This paper investigates changes in the impact of global energy and agricultural product inflation on domestic inflation, economic growth, and interest rate in five advanced commodity importing countries: Canada, the Euro Area, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States. We employ a time-varying factor-augmented Vector Autoregression (TVP-FAVAR) to estimate the global commodity inflations shocks using quarterly data from 1971 to 2017. We find that the responses of domestic inflation, economic growth and interest rate to changes in global energy and agricultural inflation has declined overtime. However, the global agricultural inflation has become more important than the global energy inflation in predicting future path of economic variables. We find that an increase in global agricultural inflation increases both headline and core inflation and decrease economic growth in Canada, the Euro Area, Japan, UK, and US. Further, we find little evidence that the Fed, the Bank of England, and the Bank of Canada respond to the change in global agricultural inflation.

Kumar, A., & Dash, P. (2019, Jun 28-Jul 2). The spillover effect of U.S. monetary policy on income inequality. Paper Presented at 94th Annual Conference of the Western Economic Association, San Francisco, California, USA.

Abstract: This paper offers new evidence of the effect of U.S. monetary policy on income inequality of open economies. The estimation is based on panel data of 141 countries from 1970 to 2016. Our main finding suggests that expansionary monetary policy by Fed increases income inequality in open economies. When Fed reduces interest rate, the capital flow to other open economies increases. This surge in capital flow may increase income inequality in open economies. Our findings stay robust to different measure of U.S. monetary policy stance, different measure of capital account openness and different econometric specification.

Abstract: Since early 2000's sectoral composition of aggregate domestic saving has observed a remarkable change across developed and developing countries. These recent changes in behavior of firm level saving in developed economies has gained scholarly attention. Presently, research is scant on understanding the behavior of private corporate saving and its interconnectedness with other macroeconomic parameters in developing economies. Globally, these changes in firm-level saving may be attributed to positive changes in profitability, reduction in relative prices of capital goods, precautionary saving motives among other factors. In India, there has been observed ups and down in the level of corporate saving, especially post 2007-08 global financial crisis there has been an observed fall followed with substantial rise.

This paper brings a systematic study on the behavior of corporate saving capturing various uncertainty indicators for India. Data from around 1500 manufacturing and 500 services sector publicly listed companies for a time period of 2004 to 2018 has been analyzed using dynamic panel GMM estimation methodology with year fixed effects. Findings suggest that economic policy uncertainty index and wholesale price inflation rate is negatively associated with corporate saving, whereas consumer price inflation rate is positively associated with corporate saving. Other firm level variables found to be significant are profitability, investment opportunity positively affecting; leverage ratio negatively affecting corporate saving. The findings suggest a dynamic persistent effect of saving behavior and negative effect of uncertainty levels, results are robust to other proxy variables used.

Shree, T., & Gupta, S.(2019). Role of Social Media in Online Radicalization: Literature Review and Research Agenda. Asia Pacific Journal of Information Systems, 29(2), 268-282.

Abstract: This study attempts to synthesize the literature on radicalization and examine the role of social media in promoting radicalization. The study is based on the review of prominent studies on radicalization in both offline and online settings. The study builds upon the literature in offline settings on radicalisation and presents a research agenda for radicalization in online settings. The study also presents a model of radicalization delineating the role of social media.

Ansari, S., & Gupta, S.(2019). Fake Reviews and Manipulation: Do Customer Reviews Matter? 27th European Conference on Information Systems (ECIS), Stockholm & Uppsala, Sweden, June 8-14, 2019.

Abstract: With the prevalence of fake reviews across web and e-commerce platforms it has become difficult for the customers to make an informed purchase decision. Considering this we examine the influence of review manipulation on customer's purchase decision. A qualitative approach employing interviews with frequent online shoppers was employed to explore the phenomenon. The results of the study suggest that customers accord recommendations from their social network more weightage than the reviews available on an e-commerce platform. Further, we found that customers apply either or both interactive and extractive strategies to deal with review manipulation.

Ansari, S., & Gupta, S.(2019). Review Manipulation and its Influence on Customer's Value in E-Commerce. Doctoral Consortium, PACIS 2019, Xi'an, China, July 8-12 , 2019.

Abstract: Online customer reviews proved to have an influence on customer's purchase. With the prevalence of fake reviews across web and e-commerce platforms it has become difficult for the customers to make an informed purchase decision. With this motivation we aim to examine the impact of review manipulation on customer's value. The thesis is divided into three essays. In the first essay using an exploratory study we explore customer's perception towards the malpractice of review manipulation. Second essay identifies the factors that led to the formation of customer's impression towards a review. Third essay explore the impact of fake reviews on customer's value. The results of this work will add to the literature of online reviews, review manipulation, and value co-creation. The work establishes the link between the review manipulation and its consequence on customers and online e-commerce platforms.
